Re: Manager, Workforce Planning

Dear Hiring Team,

I am applying for the Manager, Workforce Planning role. Over the past five years at Flipkart and Enverus, my work has centred on the same question your team answers every day: how do we forecast demand accurately, plan capacity to meet it, and keep performance on track when reality does not follow the plan?

As Category Manager for Large Appliances at Flipkart, I owned forecasting and planning for one of the platform's largest categories. I built regression-based demand forecasts and turned them into supply and in-stock plans for peak events like Big Billion Days, where volume spikes leave no room for error. That planning contributed to a 55% category revenue uplift during the event. I owned KPIs across GMV, conversion and in-stock, ran root-cause analysis when numbers slipped, and led recovery actions that grew category revenue 19% year on year. I also held sellers and vendors accountable to their commitments, which maps closely to managing outsourced partners against staffing and service-level targets.

I care about the mechanics behind a plan. I built and automated Tableau and Power BI dashboards and templates in SQL so leaders had real-time visibility instead of manual reports, and at Enverus I re-engineered global reporting through Lean Six Sigma, cutting cycle times by 20%. Whether the role leans toward the business-facing track or the technical track, I would bring analytical rigour and a habit of improving the tools themselves.

I want to be open about where I am growing: my planning experience comes from e-commerce rather than a contact-centre WFM function, and I am eager to go deep on service level, occupancy, shrinkage and your WFM platforms. The fundamentals of forecasting, capacity and KPI recovery carry over directly, and I learn new domains fast. I have also led teams on large-scale events of 800 to 1,000+ participants, handling staffing, scheduling and live issues on the day, and I am excited to grow as a people leader who coaches a team while staying close to the work.

I would welcome the chance to discuss how I can help your team keep staffing aligned with business priorities. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Juhi Bhalla
